Roanoke Presbytery. SATURDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

[Reported for the Dispatch.] DANVILLE, April 23, 1883. After the reading of the minutes of Friday (Mr. Morton not having yet come in)
Dr. Peck's paper on "Fraternal Relations" was taken up for a short time; but as soon as Mr. Morton appeared, his case was resumed. The statement of Rev. John Boyle was continued and finished. This proved to be a powerful vindication of Mr. Morton, and made a deep impression upon the Presbytery. In the course of a brief interruption of the reading of the paper Dr. Lefevre, of the Executive Committee, in showing that the committee had always highly appreciated Mr. Morton, and bad labored to harmonize difficulties so as to retain him. zeal in the service of the Campinas Institute. After the completion of Mr. Boyle's paper. Mr. Morton, in order to save time, asked for a brief suspension of the case to enable him to arrange his papers. The farther consideration of it was therefore postponed till Monday morning, and the Presbyter spent the remainder of the afternoon session and a night session in other business, chiefly in discussing the matter of the Concerd Presbyter's memorial to the General Assembly, sent down by the Assembly to the Presbyteries for their consideration, proposing to strike from the Confession of Faith the probibition against marrying a deceased wife's sistion against marrying a deceased wife's sister. The committee to whom this matter tion against marrying a deceased whe saist ter. The committee to whom this matter had been referred could not agree, and two reports were presented—one by the chairman of the committee, Dr. Peck, the other man of the committee, Dr. Peck, the other by Rev. R. C. Reed. The former took the committee to whom this matter ing the German, French, and English armies. In Germany the average age is 67, in Frence it is 60, in England it is 63. Mr. Morton made an able defence, and profoundly awakened the interest and sympathies of his hearers. "I. The Presbytery have patiently heard the papers and statements on both sides; and while very far from approving of Mr. Morton's disregard of the instructions of the Executive Committee of Foreign Missions, and while deprecating the manifested in his memorial and other papers, and while doubting the propriety of taking passage-money when he did not expect to return home immediately, and while disapproving his method of getting paid a debt which he supposed to be due him, yet judge that there is no evidence of anything dishonorable or immoral in his conduct.
